Great Excitement in Phiadelphia-A French Woman Tempts a Clergyman Extraordinary Develop-ments. The Confidence Game on a Grand Scale. From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

The main point or facts of one of the most stupendous and successful swindling operations were brought to light a few days since. To swindle the unsophisticated of the world may indeed be an easy matter, with sharpers, but to deceive a learned, intelligent, distinguished, and devout minister of the Gospel, in the enlightened city of Philadelphia, by glittering baubles of supposed wealth, cannot be very readily comprehended in these days of penny papers. But such is the case, as the sequel will show.

Several months since, a gay, pleasant and accomp lished French lady arrived in this city, and engaged ap artments at the Girard House. She was in search of a relative, who, by due process of law, was entitled to a portion of large estates weich she held in Texas. She was exceedingly rich, and expected an additional fortune in consequence of the recent decease of an uncle who had quietly passed into the shades of death, at a good old age in the city of Paris.

The lady had with her a servant, whose name, with that of her own, was registered on the books of the Girard. On looking over the newspapers one certain Saturday, she observed an advertisement that the Rev. would preach on the following day. He is a well known minister, and is at the head of one of the most fashionable and intelligent congregations in the city of Brotherly Love. His name was familiar to her, and she conceived the idea that he must be the very person she was in search of. She made diligent inquiry; found out all about him, where he was born, where he had been, where he had graduated, and, in fact, when and by whom

In a few days she called upon him and made known her business. At first he was incredulous, and firmly panished all idea about his being entitled to any inheritance whatever from that source. The wife of the reverend gentleman, however, concluded that her husband was in error, and on expressing her views, he was led into a train of deep meditation, and finally came to the conclusion that perhaps he was destined to become a millionaire without much hard work. The French lady and the wife of the reverend gentleman now became intimate; they associated together daily, enjoyed each other's hospitality, paid frequent visits to members of the congregation, and, in fact, lived high. This continued for a period of several months. During this time the deeds of the property in Texas, all of which seemed to be well authenticated, were closely scanned and so well was everything conducted on the part of the French congratulated them on their good fortune. At one time, on the arrival of a steamer from Europe, the French lady received a letter, in which it was stated that in consequence of another death having occurred in the family at Paris, some time must necessarily elapse before a remittance could be sent on; perhaps not for several months. At this announcement she seemed to grieve considerably, because it put her to such a nonplus that she could not return the hospitality in a style equal to that which had been so kindly extended to her. She talked fluently her left foot,' and gin me a kiss. Says she 'Sutty, love, was not obtained, however, by the Duke de Villeroy's of her travels through Europe and the United States, about the affairs of the nation, giving glowing accounts spoke whenever occasion required of the ameliorating influences of the Gospel, gave her opinion on the allrun up and down my back like a lizzard with a turkey whoever bore the title of an academician. Putting daring effrontery succeeded in all her applications for small sums of money, ranging from $30 to $200. She, in company with several of her admirers, would pay visits to some of the first-class stores in Chesnut street. Being a rich French lady, in company with rich ladies of our city, whose well-known faces had often been reflected in the mirrors that embellish the stores, the worthy attendants endeavored to outdo each other in politeness.

All this time the "fair creature" was weaving as pretty a piece of net work around her unsuspecting admirers as could well be thought of. Arrangements were finally made for the French lady and servant, the Reverend and his wife, to go to Texas, in order to settle up the estates, then to return to Philadelphia to purchase a large and splendid mansion on Broad street, above Brown. A short time previous to this, a considerable quantity of silver plate, silks and satins, were obtained by the French lady, for which the Reverend became responsible.-While making all these arrangements, the minister almost forgot to visit the sick and to pray with the dying, and at last, when the moment arrived that he and his wife and the French lady were to proceed to Texas, the latter was nowhere to be found.

Here was indeed, a dilemma not expected. All the hope that had been built up; the visions of gold that had glistened before them; the castles that had been erected; the vast estates that the Reverend had fallen heir to; the many interchanges of hospitality and other reminiscences and pleasing reflections arising therefrom, faded away like a "crimson cloud in the sunset borne."-Railroad trains were sought; and the reverend gentleman succeeded in tracing her to a car on a Western road, and attempting to seize her and pull her out.
